

ALISON DUNLAP

Growing up with a passion for soccer, it wasn't until Alison Dunlap turned 19 that she began to compete in cycling. She excelled quickly and won the Women's National Road Racing Collegiate Championship.

Shortly after graduating from Colorado College, Dunlap won a gold medal at the Pan American Games and earned herself a spot in the 1996 Summer Olympics. After her first Olympic competition, Dunlap decided to test her ability in a new discipline: mountain biking.

By the 2000 Olympics, Dunlap had already qualified to represent the United States in the sport of mountain biking. One year later, she became the World Mountain Bike Champion, a feat that earned her the title, "America's Newest Sports Hero."

Dunlap lives in Colorado Springs with her husband Greg Frozley. She continues to make strides in women's mountain biking and conducts an annual mountain bike adventure camp in Moab.
